THE CITY OF NORFOLK.

ITS PAST, ITS PRESENT, AND ITS FUTURE.

The name of our city was first given to the district between the sea and the western limit of Nansemond county, the latter county being called Upper Norfolk, and what is now Norfolk county and Princess Anne, lower Norfolk. This region received its appellation from the county of Norfolk in England, whence emigrated one of the chief pioneers of this part of the Colony of Virginia.

The TOWN OF NORFOLK first appears in the history of our State in 1680, in which year an act of Assembly was passed authorizing the purchase of fifty acres for the site of the place. This land was bought from a man by the name of Nicholas Wise, and lay in what is now the Southern part of the city, embraced nearly the whole of Main street, and extended North as far as the creek which empties through the Stone Bridge, the said creek then running up nearly as far to the East as the corner of Cumberland and Cove streets.

The town was constituted a port for the importation of merchandise and slaves and the exportation of tobacco, the great staple of the Colony. The inhabitants had peculiar personal privileges bestowed upon them, among which was exemption from arrest for five years, and also of taxation during the same time.

Norfolk seems to have increased quite rapidly in population during the twenty-five years after it was laid out as above. There is no evidence that the "fifty acres" had any municipal privileges; for the first act of incorporation was passed by the Assembly in 1705.

We find that in 1728 the town was engaged in quite a brisk trade, principally with the West Indies, which derived a very large proportion of their supplies from this point, consisting of flour, lumber and provisions, the return cargoes being rum, sugar, molasses, and fruits; and the town had, even at that early date, grown to a place of considerable commercial eminence. The people are described as energetic and thrifty, and as devoting themselves exclusively to commercial pursuits. They seem to have been principally of the middle classes of the Colony, there being up to this time but few names in the town remarkable for great wealth or social position.

September 15th, 1736, is the date of the ROYAL CHARTER, constituting the Town of Norfolk a Borough, to be governed by a Mayor, Recorder, eight Aldermen, and sixteen Common Councilmen. Samuel Boush, Esq., was the first Mayor, and Sir John Randolph the first Recorder. The charter was in the name of King George II., and the document was witnessed by William Gooch, Lieutenant-Governor of the Colony of Virginia.

It is probable that Norfolk increased very rapidly from 1736 to 1776. During this period the commerce of the Borough was immense; it did the importing and exporting for nearly the whole State; and not only for Virginia, but it imported for many of the other colonies. The merchants acquired wealth with great rapidity, and there were now found in the place many gentlemen of great distinction; there was much of fashionable life, and the Borough had become a very different place from the "town" of Norfolk, filled with small traders and hardworking mechanics.

The masses of the people at the time of the Royal Charter must have been very liberal in their political opinions; for at this time household suffrage was conferred upon the people—a remarkable fact, when we reflect upon the ideas prevalent at that day. There is another evidence of their political bias in the joyful celebrations which took place when they exulted over the defeat of the "Pretender" in 1745, at which the whole population turned out in procession. This shows them to have been staunch adherents to the House of Hanover, enemies to the divine right of kings, and belonging to that party called Whigs.

The people of the Borough were almost wholly Englishmen by birth, or the immediate descendants of such. They were much allied with the West Indies not only by trade, but by family connections. A large part of the people came from the Bermudas, driven thence by the oppression of the governor of that colony. These emigrants in the early part of the last century settled Bermuda street.

In 1766 most, if not all, of the influential citizens of Norfolk assembled at the Courthouse and formed an association styled the SONS OF LIBERTY. Its object was to protest against the Stamp Act, which they saw, if unopposed, would be the entering-wedge to all sorts of oppression. These gentlemen passed very firm, and at the same time temperate resolutions, which in every line show the high-toned Whig principles of those composing the meeting.

On the 1st of January, 1776, Norfolk was burned to the ground—not one house was left standing in the whole Borough. Who did the deed is a matter of dispute, some authorities de-claiming that it was set on fire by shots from Dunmore's fleet lying off the foot of Church street, others that the citizens applied the torches themselves, and others again that the town was destroyed by order of the General Assembly of Virginia.

The truth is probably about as follows, according to the best information that we can gather: It is tolerably evident that the British destroyed a portion of the part of the Borough lying near the water, and that Dunmore had determined to quarter upon the town his forces, consisting of British sailors, soldiers, and a rabble of tories and negroes. As these had already burnt a part of the dwellings of the Borough and committed all sorts of excesses, the citizens, to prevent the rest of their town from furnishing quarters to such a barbarous foe, set fire to their houses throughout its limits, justly supposing, no doubt, that such would be its fate anyhow if the British should winter in their dwellings.

Such was the fate of the wealthiest town in the State. The people were reduced to the greatest distress, and migrated temporarily into the adjacent counties, whence they did not return till after the war. The size of the town may be judged from the fact that in 1775 there were six thousand whites resident in its limits, and the loss of the property destroyed has been computed at nearly four hundred thousand pounds sterling, equal to about one million eight hundred thousand dollars in gold, or two million five hundred thousand dollars in our present currency. We should, however, not forget that a hundred years ago gold could buy at least three times as much as at present; so that the intrinsic loss sustained by the people of Norfolk, if incurred at the present day, would have amounted to fully seven million five hundred thousand dollars in our depreciated money.

The above estimate shows the great wealth of the old Borough in 1776. This is not to be wondered at; for the town was then the most flourishing port of Virginia, the brightest jewel of the British crown.

It must be remembered that Norfolk then supplied most of the tobacco used in the world, and that a very large portion of the lumber for the construction of the British Navy, as well as of its mercantile marine, was furnished by the merchants of Norfolk. Moreover, the old Borough exported the rich products of the then virgin soil of Virginia to feed the West Indies, and imported their sugar, rum and molasses not only for Virginia, but for a great part of the other colonies.

The trade was principally in the hands of English and Scotch merchants, generally the younger members of firms in London and Glasgow. These were for the most part gentlemen of standing, and the conditions under which commerce was carried on in those days enabled them soon to amass great wealth. They made a large percentage on importations; for the colony was so flourishing that the planters lived in great luxury ; and as Virginia enjoyed the monopoly of tobacco, and to a great extent of lumber and naval stores, their exports paid them enormous profits.

Comparatively few of the descendants of these old merchants are now to be found in the State ; for it is a singular fact that it was almost universally stipulated in the articles of the firms, by which they were sent to Virginia, that the partners here were not to marry, it being feared that domestic relations contracted here would alienate them from the mother country. At the Revolution most of the merchants went back to England.

Such is the history of the first period in the existence of Norfolk, from its settlement up to 1776.

Soon after the Revolution the Borough began to rise from its ashes and its commerce to expand. In 1790 its population amounted to 2,950 ; in 1800 it had increased to 6,926 ; the value of its exports at this date was about $4,000,000 ; and in 1805 about $7,500,000. The average number of vessels entering our harbor during the six years ending in 1806, was 468.

During the period from 1800 to 1807, when the Embargo was laid upon shipping, Norfolk was a very busy port. It is said that during the seasons when commerce was most active it was difficult to cross in a ferry-boat from Norfolk to Portsmouth, and the town was crammed with people.

Our white population was made up from many sources. 1st. There was the original stock of Virginians ; 2d. Many emigrants from Great Britain, among whom was found a considerable number of our chief merchants ; 3d. A large French element, chiefly from Hayti ; and 4th. The transient population connected with commerce. In 1805 the inhabitants of all classes, black and white, amounted to ten thousand ; and a wealthier and more thrifty community for its size was not to be found in America. It must not be forgotten that at this period Norfolk did a larger business than any port south of New York, and her commercial relations extended to all parts of Europe and America.

The Embargo of 1807 was a great blow to the trade of Norfolk. It was taken off in 1809 ; but Norfolk did not fully recover from the damage it caused to her trade before the war of 1812, when her commerce was again set back.

The years 1819 and 1820 were peculiarly severe upon the prosperity of Norfolk. The commercial distress of the country was great, and the Navigation Laws of 1820 had the effect of crippling our trade very much, especially with the West Indies. The larger number of our great merchants failed, and for many years this period was looked upon as an era of ruin. In 1825 the exports from our port only reached $219,912, being, however, $19,412 more than those from Baltimore of the same year. The commercial restrictive system between the United States and the West Indies had almost entirely annihilated our commerce, and a great fire that occurred in 1827 destroyed many of the houses of the Borough being added to the commercial disasters of former years, brought down its fortunes to a very low ebb. From this year, indeed, to 1832 there was very little business done in Norfolk, whose population reached its lowest point in 1826-7, when it was estimated not to exceed seven or eight thousand. Beyond this number it began slowly to advance, when the cholera of 1832 occurred, which was very destructive to human life, principally among the negroes; indeed, so great was the number of deaths among them, that after that year the slaves never recovered their former ratio to the whites.

In January, 1834, was passed the Portsmouth and Roanoke Railroad Bill. It was hoped that this work would be of vast benefit to Norfolk. These expectations were not fulfilled; for the improvement was not connected with a great network of other lines in North Carolina, as is at present the case, and only brought to Norfolk and Portsmouth a small trade from the country along the work. It was also impossible to contend with Petersburg, which at that time engrossed the business of nearly the whole of that part of North Carolina, to obtain which the road was constructed. It languished for some years, and then went down. The work was sold and purchased by the present proprietors, under whose management, under the name of the Seaboard and Roanoke Railroad, it is now in a most flourishing condition.

The Dismal Swamp Canal was commenced in 1787 under a joint charter of Virginia and North Carolina. By this work the communication was established between the waters of the Elizabeth river and those of the sounds and principal rivers in North Carolina.

This Canal has been of very great benefit to Norfolk, being for many years the only improvement which brought to us the produce of any back country, save that to which we had access by our rivers. The Portsmouth and Roanoke Road did very little for Norfolk, and that for only the few years of its brief existence.

Nevertheless, Norfolk continued after 1832 gradually to increase in commerce and population. There was a slight augmentation of our trade with both the French and English colonies in the West Indies; but the emancipation of the slaves in the latter prevented this branch of our commerce attaining anything like its ancient importance.

In 1840 the population had reached ten thousand nine hundred and twenty by the census; but it was thought to be really somewhat over that number.

In 1845 there were some alterations made in the charter of Norfolk, and it has since that time been styled a city.

In 1850 the census of the city showed a population of fourteen thousand three hundred and twenty, being an increase over the enumeration of 1840 of three thousand four hundred.

In November, 1851, the Seaboard and Roanoke Railroad was completed to Weldon.

In 1858 the Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad began its operations. It is eighty miles in length, and by far the most important of all the public works connected with our city, since it is the Eastern terminus of a line from the Atlantic to the Mississippi.

The Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal was opened for traffic in 1859, and is an improvement that must greatly benefit Norfolk, since it connects it with the Sounds of North Carolina, and is navigable for vessels of sufficient size to cross the Atlantic.

The Dismal Swamp Canal, the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal, the Seaboard and Roanoke Railroad, and the Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad, are the four great works connecting us with North Carolina and the West. There is but one other great Railroad to be built—the Norfolk and Great Western along the valley of the Roanoke and Dan, and thence over the mountains to Bristol. By this route fifty-five miles of transportation between this city and the West will be saved, thus bringing us several hours nearer to the Valley of the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri than we are. This Railroad must be built to ensure the quickest transit to the great cities of the West and Northwest.

The commerce of Norfolk went on gradually increasing from 1850 to the War, and for the last five years previous to that event our city was attaining to something of its earlier prosperity. During the four eventful years of that terrible struggle our citizens suffered very severely; but as the history of those sad times is so recent, it would be useless to go into details.

While the whole State of Virginia has been terribly desolated, and while no portions of our ancient Commonwealth have felt the consequences of that scourge more sensibly than our cities, there is one exception, and that is Norfolk. To our city the results of the war have been positively beneficial in awakening a spirit of energy not exhibited before, and in directing the attention of the whole country, both North, South and West, to this port as the nearest on the Atlantic to the great cities of the Mississippi Valley, and which must be an outlet for its boundless products.

With the Revolutionary war ended the first period in the history of Norfolk, and with the late civil war has ended its second. We are now entering upon a new state of existence, in which the most sanguine wishes of the most ardent friends of our city must be fulfilled.

Three causes once existed to keep back Norfolk from the development of her unequalled advantages. The first was the political relations of the South with the rest of the Union; the second was the careless, and even hostile, attitude of the rest of Virginia towards her; and the third was the bad reputation for health, which was a very great hindrance to our prosperity.

The first cause must soon be removed. The second has already been annihilated; for all petty jealousies have now ceased, and Virginia looks upon Norfolk as the city that will bring into her borders the commerce of Europe and the world. The evil influence of the third has vanished, we hope forever; for there is no city on the Continent that has enjoyed better health than ours, with the exception of the terrible infliction of the Yellow Fever in 1855, the cause of which has been proved to have been the importation of the pestilence by the Ben Franklin. Proper quarantine regulations will in future prevent any access of that epidemic to our port; if any such should be again brought to our city, it will be our own fault, and we shall have ourselves to blame.

If we cast our eyes upon the map of the United States, we shall see that this point is the one, and no other, to which the great public works from the Southwest, the West, and the Northwest, should converge with shortest distances. Our consolidated line to Memphis has already brought to us a large part of the trade of Tennessee, and must shortly bring us all, as well as that of Arkansas, and of a very large part of Mississippi and Alabama. When the connection between Bristol and Cumberland Gap, ninety-five miles, is completed, we shall there meet the Louisville, Harrodsburg and Virginia Road, which will bring us into direct communication with Louisville and all the great cities of the Northwest. The larger portion of this richest region in the whole world will thus be tributary to Norfolk—nothing can prevent it—nothing has prevented it thus far but the causes which we have detailed above, which will no longer prevent the fulfillment of our destiny. Trade must seek its level, and will break down all impediments in the way of its doing so. Nothing now remains to be overcome but a few miles of road; but the necessities of the country will very soon remedy that obstacle.

When the productions of a continent begin to centre here, there will be no lack of capital, and of lines of ocean steamers to dispose of it; for in matters of trade the supply will always equal the demand. If, as we know, our port possesses superior advantages, both as regards its nearness to the Valleys of the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri, its proper position on the Atlantic Coast, its depth of water, and its climate, nothing can prevent the trade of an immense portion of the Northwest being diverted to Norfolk. When this diversion shall have been established, there will be no limit to the commercial grandeur of our city; for as long as the riches of this vast country from the harbor of Norfolk to that of San Francisco shall continue to be developed, so long shall our city continue to increase. The prophet, when he beheld the future greatness of Israel, exclaimed, "I see it—but not now : I behold it—but not nigh!" and so did the great men of Virginia, the Jeffersons and the Madisons, the seers of other days. But we see the grandeur of the noblest seaport of America within the close range of our vision, and know that there is shortly to be accomplished a destiny which never entered into the wildest imagination of the statesmen of the past. We see that this generation shall not pass away before it shall behold merchant navies from every nation of the world land their rich cargoes on the wharves surrounding a harbor that can contain ten times as many ships as now plough the waters of the whole earth, and receive in return the productions and the manufactures of the wealthiest nation upon which the sun ever shone.

Merchants and business men of Norfolk, it does not entirely depend upon you to bring about this immense prosperity—for whether you will it, or not, the Great West demands an outlet here, and nowhere else. Nevertheless, you have it in your power to hasten the day when your city shall be the admiration of America, and you already have within your grasp the cords by which you can draw to your city the wealth of a continent, and make yourselves, like the Tyrians of old, the Merchant Princes of the Earth.

National Savings Bank

The National Freedman's SAVINGS & TRUST CO.

Chartered by Act of Congress, March, 1865.

NORFOLK BRANCH, 14 MAIN STREET.

This Company has its Branches in all leading Southern cities. Its Financial agent in New York is the House of Messrs. JAY COOKE & CO., where all its drafts are payable.

It offers depositors ENTIRE SECURITY, and sight payment of all deposits, with interest on all balances payable in March, November and July of each year.

As a Trust Company it receives and executes special trusts. It is a purely BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION, its net earnings belonging exclusively to its depositors.

The Norfolk Branch has now a balance due depositors of FIFTY-TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS, and the Company, at all its branches, has nearly ONE MILLION DOLLARS.

 Deposits of One Dollar and upwards received from any person.

NORFOLK DAY BOOK.

The attention of the reading public is respectfully called to this valuable journal, which is now published Daily, Tri-weekly, and Weekly.

The DAY BOOK, which was founded in October, 1857, and highly prosperous until broken up by General Wool, in May, 1862, is too well known throughout the country to render it necessary here to enter into detail as to its merits. It is devoted to NEWS, SOUTHERN COMMERCE, AGRICULTURE, AND THE INDUSTRIAL ARTS; in fact, any and all things that will develop the resources and power of the South.

THE DAY BOOK

Has the LARGEST CIRCULATION of any newspaper published in Eastern Virginia and North Carolina, and as an advertising medium presents unsurpassed advantages. Advertising terms very liberal.

THE WEEKLY DAY BOOK

Gives a corrected Prices Current, with a review of the Norfolk Market, each week, and should be in the hands of every Farmer and Dealer trading with Norfolk, who has produce or provisions to sell or buy.

TERMS, Cash in Advance:

THE DAILY DAY BOOK supplied through the mail to any section of the country at $5 a year, and $3 for six months.

THE TRI-WEEKLY DAY BOOK, per year, $3; for six months, $1.75.

THE WEEKLY DAY BOOK, the cheapest paper in the United States, $1 a year; for six months, 60 cents.

Club Rates of Subscription to the Weekly Day Book.

One copy one year.....	$1 00
Five copies one year, and one to the getter up of the club.....	5 00
Ten " " " " " " " ".....	9 00
Twenty " " " " " " " ".....	15 00
